To the penguin pen

The name speaks for itself. Mystic Aquarium, one of many others, gives you the chance to learn more about the species and how they’re cared for at Mystic.

Since its beginning last summer, Mystic Aquarium’s Contact Program has become a popular attraction for aquarium fans and bird lovers alike.

The penguin pen is a 15-foot-square, glass-enclosed area, where the birds can swim in the tanks and play with the visitors, while learning more about the species and how they’re cared for at Mystic.

After a brief talk on basic facts about penguins, care, and feeding, you’re able to either enter two small narrow rooms, where one or two spectacled penguins are held, or to enter a glass pod and watch them swim in an antiseptic tank without any fish, even for a few seconds.

You’re in for a treat, not only because they’re a cute small bird with a pink breast, who feed on fish and is the only bird that doesn’t have a bill. Mystic Aquarium gives you the chance to partake in the Contact Program.

To start off with, you meet Miss Yellow-Yellow, the biggest seal at Mystic, who is named Coco, who was supposed to be the audience.

To Connecticut’s own Mystic Aquarium is a great place to do all kinds of things.

To start with, be sure to go to the sea lion and/or the penguin pen. To Mystic Aquarium is a great place to do all kinds of things. Mystic Aquarium offers you a chance to get to know its furry friends a little bit better, and it’s all part of Mystic’s Contact Program.

To the penguin pen, you may see seagulls, ten of them flying around. You’ll also get a good view of the new 14-year-old penguins, which are as young as their parents.

To Mystic Aquarium is a great place to do all kinds of things, and it’s all part of Mystic’s Contact Program.

To Mystic Aquarium is a great place to do all kinds of things. Mystic Aquarium offers you a chance to get to know its furry friends a little bit better, and it’s all part of Mystic’s Contact Program.