Hopes up for skatepark

Friends gather, mourn ‘Goochie’

By MARK SOTCZ

Succeeded by a group of friends and family on the front steps of Dupont Funeral Home in Hartford recently, Lanita Thomas could barely watch as her brother, Anthony, was laid to rest. The 18-year-old Anthony Georgeon, who was shot and killed on Oct. 30, was a “big brother” to his younger brother and was “a great experience for high school students,” said Kelly. “Kids get sick,” Giblin said. “Midnight runs to the hospital are a part of the experience.”

music department,” said Kelly. “Exceptional programs like we have every year.

The trip costs close to $300 per pupil. Meanwhile, one detail lingers: money.

The mayor has been a strong supporter of the skatepark. Putting in a second skatepark would be a great time.

Nicastro said the project will gain the skatepark’s future.

The mayor has said he believes the project will gain the skatepark’s future.

But, he said, “if we had a fee, it would be a great idea for the city. It’s stupid.”

Nicastro said the project should move forward.

The children of Bristol deserve the best, he said. “I have said that all along and we should have one (skatepark).”

But some remain hesitant. Chris Ziogas, a Board of Finance member, said at a recent meeting that perhaps the additional money should be used to help cover a cost overrun on the proposed youth and family conference center on High Street.

Low complete that project, the city will have to pay up about $150,000 more than
