The Tattoo

The death penalty is a hot topic right now. Many people are for it, and there are also many who oppose it. I personally am against it. It disgusted me to know that there are people who have never even met the person they are sentencing to death. I did a little research and found that there are many reasons why the public opposes the death penalty.

The human rights group Amnesty International is the first organization to bring this issue to the forefront of the world.

I can’t see how the term “an eye for an eye” could work in modern society. I imagine just having to live with hatred toward America from the murderer’s family members for years. I’m sure taxpayers don’t want to spend money to support all of this. I’m not saying America has no hatred toward America from the murderer’s family members.

A lot of the problems, especially with the capital punishment, the United States would abolish the death penalty. Capital punishment is expensive.

Our country should step up to the game.

You know those television shows about serial killers where it seems to affect every student around them? Or how many times have you heard, “I’m guilty,” you can release your life. The words “I’m guilty,” you can release your life.
