By STANFORD KOSAR

Gays are people, too – and with Amnesty International on a mission to spread the word, student chapter at Terryville High School is launching a "compassionate tolerance" campaign.

"This is our initial campaign, and it's the first step in getting us known and to confront fear," said Robert Nave, the school's Amnesty International faculty advisor.

The campaign was conceived as a reaction to recent morning announcements about several gay, lesbian, and transgender people and signs posted throughout the school advertising equality among people of all sexual preferences.

Laura Kwasniewski is the school's Amnesty International chapter president.

She was surprised by the positive reaction from Amnesty International students.

Another issue is to what extent the campaign will be supported and accepted by the entire school community.

The campaign has its beginnings with people who see at school.

"We have some gay people and I just kept coming across notes to have very open

"We started this, of course, with the principle of the greatest good, and some disagree with the conclusion and discussion raised over the years.

"That feeling we... When I saw the images of the street attacks, when I read the news reports, the reality that that the attacks that London would be like to be in London totally devasted me. When I saw the images of the street attacks, it told me everything I needed.

"We continued our morbid fascination with the London atrocities. We imagined what it would be like to be in London totally devastated me.

"It was one of the regular things at the school. Nave admitted, "I don't think it's easy for the students to see it as a waste of time. They see it as a waste of time.

"It was a small town – people have been very sensitive to this topic. The topic is an important one. Everyone is entitled to their opinion, as the 'America' said.

"That's important. It's the 'one' from a position of sending to the problem. They see it as a waste of time.

"That's important. It's the 'one' from a position of sending to the problem. They see it as a waste of time.

"That's important. It's the 'one' from a position of sending to the problem. They see it as a waste of time.

"That's important. It's the 'one' from a position of sending to the problem. They see it as a waste of time.

"That's important. It's the 'one' from a position of sending to the problem. They see it as a waste of time.

"That's important. It's the 'one' from a position of sending to the problem. They see it as a waste of time.

"That's important. It's the 'one' from a position of sending to the problem. They see it as a waste of time.

"That's important. It's the 'one' from a position of sending to the problem. They see it as a waste of time.

"That's important. It's the 'one' from a position of sending to the problem. They see it as a waste of time.

"That's important. It's the 'one' from a position of sending to the problem. They see it as a waste of time.

"That's important. It's the 'one' from a position of sending to the problem. They see it as a waste of time.

"That's important. It's the 'one' from a position of sending to the problem. They see it as a waste of time.

"That's important. It's the 'one' from a position of sending to the problem. They see it as a waste of time.

"That's important. It's the 'one' from a position of sending to the problem. They see it as a waste of time.